A survey was carried out to determine the current diagnostic procedures employed in veterinary practice and the reasons for their adoption. Data were collected from the majority of veterinary practice and the majority of practices were supplied with a dietetic adviser. The only significant differences in the diagnostic procedures adopted by veterinary practices in the UK were in relation to body condition scoring and the administration of mineral and electrolytes. The survey was undertaken to detect any differences in the approach to the diagnosis and treatment of feeding disorders between veterinary practices in the UK and veterinary practices in Australia, in terms of diagnostic procedures and treatment strategies. The results showed that there was little difference between practice in the UK and Australia in the diagnostic procedures employed in veterinary practice. Some differences were noted in the manner in which owners are advised and recorded their animals' responses to a general health survey, dietary regimes and the manner in which consultations with veterinary surgeons are arranged. The differences identified may reflect a difference in the way the trade in both countries is organised.#!/bin/sh # Generated file, master is Makefile.am . ${srcdir:-.}/common.sh infile="$srcdir/images/palette-1c-1r-gray.tiff" outfile="o-tiffcrop-extract-palette-1c-1r-gray.tiff" f_test_convert "$TIF
