Disparate effects of a serotonin receptor agonist and antagonist on the endocrine pancreas. The 5-HT4 receptor agonist tegaserod stimulated insulin and somatostatin secretion from dispersed, collagenase-isolated rat pancreatic islets incubated in RPMI-1640 containing 11.1 mmol/L glucose. Stimulation of insulin secretion was seen at 1 mumol/L tegaserod, maximal at 10 mumol/L, and achieved through an increase in glucose-induced (20 mmol/L) insulin secretion. In contrast, a concentration of 10 mumol/L tegaserod inhibited somatostatin secretion in a dose-dependent manner and was associated with a subsequent dose-dependent inhibition of insulin secretion at the lowest concentration used. However, at a concentration of 100 mumol/L tegaserod, somatostatin secretion was greatly stimulated by this drug. Following treatment of the islets with 10 mumol/L 5-HT4 agonist, somatostatin secretion was inhibited by 45% after 3 hours. Somatostatin secretion following 10 mumol/L tegaserod was completely restored following coincubation with 10 mumol/L 5-HT4 antagonist. The effect of tegaserod on glucose-induced secretion was blocked by 10 mumol/
